IS CANADA DESTINED TO BECOME THE SCENE OF A GREAT JEWISH AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT?

By Rabbi Ferdinand M. Isserman

Fifty Polish war orphans, constituting the entire population of an orphanage in Mezrich, Poland, twenty-two girls and twenty-eight boys, from the ages of nine to seventeen, are en route to the Jewish Farm School at Georgetown, Ontario, and are scheduled to arrive in Canada June twenty-seventh. They are being brought out here largely on the initiative of one individual in co-operation with a Detroit relief society. Though the arrangements for their coming were rather haphazard and inadequate, though the whole plan for bringing them here lacked scientific social thinking and vision, once these parentless children touch Canadian soil, all doubts and criticisms and reservations must vanish, as Canadian Jewry will unanimously rise to welcome and provide for these unfortunate waifs of fortune. Several years ago under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Freiman of Ottawa, one hundred and fifty orphans from the Ukraine were brought to Canada. One quarter of a million dollars was subscribed by the Jews of Canada for their maintenance. Many of them were taken into the homes of leading Jews and are still treated as their own children. That beautiful expression of gemilath chesed is still cherished with pride. Surely these fifty orphans from Poland shall receive no less generous a response from the Jews of Canada. What matters it where they hail from? They are homeless. Destiny has placed them under the guardianship of Canadian Jewry. We must and will provide for them. We appeal to the Jews of Canada to come forward, and send their contributions at once to that venerable and philanthropic Nestor of Canadian Jewry, Edmund Scheuer, 131 Yonge Street, Toronto, Ontario.

But these orphans are coming under an interesting arrangement. The government has permitted them to come to Canada, on the stipulation that they study farming at the Canadian Jewish Farm School of Georgetown, Ont. If a good proportion of these orphans will become farmers, then the Canadian government will open wide its doors to the Jewish youth of Poland who desire to settle on the land and till the soil.

Reports have recently reached us that one million Jews must emigrate from Poland in order to relieve the economic distress there. Canadian farm lands could accommodate many of these. The Canadian government will welcome as immigrants all bona fide farmers. If the large Jewish colonization and relief agencies, such as the Ica, the Hias and the J.D.C., would concentrate some of their energies on Canadian Jewish land settlements, they could in an effective way permanently solve the problem of thousands of European Jews. Large tracts of fertile land are available in Canada. It is a modern progressive country, with splendid social legislation, with a comfortable climate and free from the vicious anti-Semitism of Eastern Europe—a member of the British Empire, whose treatment of Jews has been exceptionally fine. Jewish farmers could live happily in Canada.

These fifty orphans may be but the forerunners of a large Jewish

THE YOUNG JUDAEA CONVENTION

This week-end there will be held in this city the annual convention of the Canadian Young Judaea Organization. It is expected that some hundred delegates will be in attendance. A varied programme has been arranged by the local leaders in charge which will make the convention both interesting and instructive.

Young Judaea is the junior organization of the Zionist movement. It operates among the younger generation. Its doctrinal basis is similar to that of the Zionist Organization. It assumes that the Jewish people are a nation, and interprets their history and present existence in the terms of national life. Its practical task consists in infusing the idea of Jewish nationalism into the intellectual and social life of the growing generation so that their manner and attitude shall become coloured by the Jewish ingredient. It has evolved a technique which is in keeping with the best teachings of modern pedagogy. It attempts to create a Jewish atmosphere rich in the play of subtle forces that shape tendencies, to combat the action of the environment. It recognizes the crushing power of the unfriendly surroundings. It aims to build up an adequate resistance.

It is one of the chief weaknesses of the general Zionist Organization that it fails to appreciate the corrosive effect of the environment in the character of its membership, and neglects to provide the necessary antidotes. Zionism believes that the Jewish people have a national personality. A people is not an abstraction. It is a totality of individuals. If the people as a whole have the character of a nation, then the constituent individuals have in their way the characteristics of the nation. Zionism seeks to preserve the national character of the people as a whole. It does not concern itself with the maintenance of the Jewish disposition among the individuals. We have Jews who give as Zionists and do not live as Zionists.

That Young Judaea manages to continue as a nationalizing agency among the youth is almost a miracle. It might have been expected that the Zionist Organization would appreciate the willingness of the youthful enthusiasts to co-operate with them and give them the support which it is within their power to give. But the Zionist Organization is now and has been for some time mainly a money-collecting body. In its scheme of things the cultural phrase of Jewish nationalism has no place. Necessarily it is not in the proper frame of mind to appreciate the urgency of cultural endeavour among the youth. And its treatment of Young Judaea has always been that of a grudging parent dealing with a step-child. At times it did throw a crumb of support to the noisome, clamorous youngsters. Never was there shown an attitude of sympathetic understanding of their motives and appreciation of the value of their services.

The convention will have before it the perennial problem of how to make brick without stubble. The present Zionist administration has not been very generous in its financial assistance to the organization. With the niggardly appropriation at its disposal young Judaea will find it impossible to carry on its work effectively. The leaders have a right to expect to be relieved of the anxiety of financing the activity of their organization. The elders should be only too

CHAS. GURD & CO. TO ISSUE STOCK

It is understood that a group of Montreal stock exchange houses have acquired an interest in the business of Charles Gurd & Co., Limited, Montreal, one of Canada's longest-established soft drink manufacturers and that announcement of new financing in connection with the firm will be made shortly.

It is apparent that the public will be given an opportunity to subscribe to an issue of preferred and common stock, offered on attractive terms.

Charles Gurd & Co., Limited occupy a unique position in the soft drink industry. It was established sixty years ago by Mr. Charles Gurd and he has been in active control of the company ever since.

The company commenced operations with one delivery wagon and a plant of proportionately modest dimensions. At the present time it is by far the largest maker of soft drinks in the Province of Quebec, with a large export business and an active trading connection with other parts of Canada.

As far back as the Chicago World's Fair the firm enjoyed a reputation for making products of an unusually fine quality. On that occasion it won the highest awards in competition with the products of manufacturers of similar lines from throughout the world, and similar successes were gained at the World's Fair in Paris in 1900, Ottawa, 1889, and Montreal in 1861.

The exhibit of the company at the Wembley Exhibition caused much favourable comment from visitors throughout the Empire, but as the day of competitive exhibits had passed by that time no awards were given.

The entire expansion of the company has been effected through the reinvestment of accumulated earnings, the present anticipated offering of stock being the first opportunity afforded the public of investing in the securities of the company.

Officials of the company ascribe their outstanding success in the soft drink industry in large degree to the uncompromisingly high quality of the ingredients that go into their products, and the formulae used in the manufacture of their lines, which at the present time represent some sixty years' experience in making soft drinks.

CHEERFUL WINDOWS

A prettily curtained window will add much to the attractiveness of your home. Women who are careful about the approach to their home, be it cottage, apartment, or flat, know that nothing will enhance the looks of the building, or give as much charm and cheeriness to the onlooker as dainty, well arranged curtains or window shades. The Lavigne Window Shade Co., 1159-1161 Bleury Street, are past masters of the art of making shades that are excellent from rod to the lace that finishes them. There are plain shades of good quality for those who prefer the most simple article; but in addition there is a wide range of shades that are really beautifully trimmed with insertions and edgings of lovely lace that is as pleasing as it is durable. Whatever your colour scheme, shades and curtains can be found that will blend well.

Have you ever longed for a sun parlour or a porch that would give you a breezy sitting-out on the hottest of days? Our Keep-Kool Wood Slat Porch Blinds will transform that odd verandah into just such a spot. Those who are interested in attractive windows for homes, apartment houses or stores would do well to consult the Lavigne Window Shade Co.

Instead of decorations painted directly on hard plaster, Chinese pattern wallpapers may be used and waterproofed with shellac. The wainscot is painted, the floor linoleum or mastic.

The cream-white Crane fixtures are in harmony. The graceful Revere lavatory with integral splashback, of twice-fired vitreous china, matches in color the Corwith bath of porcelain enamel on iron, with outer surfaces molded in four receding planes. The Saneto is quiet.

MONTREAL BUILDING ACTIVITY

The winter months have seen a building activity that has changed the aspect of Montreal's busiest sections. Beautiful and modern apartment houses stand, graceful and sound, where but yesterday a selected lot was a blot on the landscape. Comfortable and cosy cottages of the one-family or duplex variety have sprung up in Outremont, Notre Dame de Grace and Westmount. Heated flats, of the better sort, are making for saner living conditions in the north and east end. Factory buildings have been erected in a manner that combines efficiency and excellent appearance. Stores have been rebuilt after a plan that promotes better selling. And, as always the Jewish members of the community have given time and money to building. The hundreds of thousands of dollars that the Jew has spent with success on building in the past few seasons is indicative of the sort of building investments in which they are interested at the moment.

The Medico-Dental Building, at the corner of Bishop and St. Catherine Streets, was completed recently by Ross and MacDonald, architects, for M. Cummings. The building is in Italian style, with an entrance hall of terraza and ornamental plaster. The frame-work of reinforced concrete makes the building completely fireproof. There is an ornamental iron treatment around the windows and stores; boiler rooms on every floor, finished in tile; and two elevators. The first storey is entirely faced in stone, with a grey brick face trimming. There are six stores on the ground floor, and 71 offices in the building that are equipped for dentists and doctors.

J. Gilletz is engaged on an apartment house of 13 suites at the corner of Dorchester and Green Avenue, that will be ready for occupation on October 1. Frigidaire will be installed. He is also building a group of three duplexes, valued at $100,000, on McEachran Avenue, in Outremont, to be ready in August. They will be in ordinary duplex style with two separate entrances, and two garages at rear of each house. The houses, which are for sale, are of two storeys each, with open fireplace, two bathrooms, ironing boards, double sinks, pantries, etc. There are 7 rooms in each flat, with windows on all four sides. Among the store renovations, executed by J. Gilletz, was the remodelling of the store front for Franke Levasseur, on Craig Street, near Bleury.

B. Kaplan, Esplanade Avenue, contractor and builder, completed in April a block of six heated flats at 1570-1580 Van Horne, near Davaar, valued at $40,000. In Gothic style, with rustic mixed maganes, they are finished in Flemish bond trimmed with artificial stone. The interior is of bright wood-

Kaplan is building again at Van Horne and Davaar—this time an 18-suite apartment house in Gothic style that will cost about $80,000. He is also at work on a $100,000 apartment house at the corner of Western and Oliver Avenues in Westmount, in Gothic style, that will be ready for fall occupation.

B. Shapiro and S. Laing, of the Lancashire Land and Construction Company, who have built with such great success in Notre Dame de Grace, have completed a group of 10 delightful cottages on Marcil Avenue. Another apartment house in Westmount that will be ready for occupation in the fall is a $50,000 edifice, being erected by them at the corner of Grosvenor and Sherbrooke Streets.

I. Kaufman, of 324 Elm Avenue, recently completed work on a modern apartment house at Notre Dame de Grace and Grand Boulevard Avenues, which is extremely fine in every detail. He is now building another large apartment house on the east side of Prud'homme Avenue, below Sherbrooke, that will be ready in the fall.

God Moves in a Mysterious Way

By ELMA ERHLICH LEVINGER

(Copyright, 1927. All rights reserved.)

The doctor smiled satirically over his tall glass of tea. A long, thin man, his bushy white hair and beard faintly suggestive of that mad Russian, Tolstoi. He reached for a lump of sugar; held it poised above the steaming glass.

"Once a Jew, always a Jew," said the doctor. "Or shall we say 'always'? I remember reading in my mispent youth that the 'unborn soul takes upon itself the yoke of the Torah.' Not long ago I almost believed it. A very peculiar case. Yes. God surely moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform, as the hymn writer puts it."

Now as the writers of serial stories always say, "read the rest of the story for yourself."

She was a frail, wiry flapper, married at eighteen, a mother at twenty. The baby, a fine, lusty youngster was exercising his lungs in the hospital nursery, and all was well within him. But complications had set in and those about the young mother's bed were white and tense with waiting.

They stood there, the boyish husband (who doesn't come into the story at all); the neurotic, hysterical mother; the father silent and dignified in the midst of his grief. And, of course, my friend, the doctor. The doctor was an old friend of the family; in fact, he himself had ushered Evelyn Rosen into this vale of tears she seemed about to desert with such tragic swiftness. Not a religionist himself, the doctor had not been especially shocked when the Rosen's, growing prosperous in this world's goods, had ceased to pay dues to the Temple, and had sent little Evelyn to an Episcopalian Sunday school. With the big, blue eyes and yellow curls the fortunate child had never been recognized as a Jewess. During her high school days she had met Bob Morris, of one of our best Gentile families. There was no talk of intermarriage. Evelyn Rosen to all intents and purposes was no longer a Jewess.

An Episcopalian clergyman had performed the marriage ceremony. The only Jew at the wedding, except the bride and her parents, had been Mrs. Rosen's bachelor brother, who was expected to remember Evelyn handsomely in his will. He had already deposited a very respectable check in the savings bank for Bob, Jr., now alternately sleeping or howling in the nursery. But it seemed as though the young mother would never live to thank him.

Evelyn lay back on her pillows, her short, gold curls a mockingly bright halo about her pinched face; her long, transparent fingers, ringless save for the platinum band, picked at the sheets; her pale lips twitched to utter words they could not understand. The doctor knew the crisis was upon them. He wondered dully whether it was worth bringing life into an already over-populated planet at such a price. He bent down over the frail figure, the words he caught startled and shook him more than he cared to acknowledge even to himself. There was a strange look in his eyes when he raised his head.

"There is still hope," said the doctor.

Evelyn did not die although for weeks her life hung upon a very slender thread. The doctor in his daily visits knew better than to ask her the meaning of the words she had murmured in that terrible moment when her family had gathered about what they had believed would prove her death bed. As a true scientist, the memory of her mumblings teased and tormented him. He could not account for what he had considered at the time her deathbed confession; he bided his time, determined to solve the mystery.

Several months later, when spring was in the air and the city streets were bright with ladies' bonnets and the trays of flower vendors, the doctor came to visit his patient. He found Evelyn lying near the window on a chaise longue, an elaborately embroidered cover over her feet, a pillow to match tucked behind her bright head. On the table an Easter lily bloomed from a gayly decorated pot; above the bed hung a very lovely and impractical Madonna, as beautiful as a poet's dream of Paradise, but appearing far too stupid to bathe and dress and feed the naked infant lolling in her lap. The doctor, glancing over the pictured deification of motherhood, smiled his slow satiric smile.

Evelyn caught his grin and wondered. "My Easter gift from Bob," she explained. "He thinks that when I hold Sonny I look a little like her."

"Heaven forbid!" the doctor murmured impolitely. Then aloud: "Your husband's a good Episcopalian, isn't he?"

Evelyn's brows wrinkled at the irrelevance of his question. "Hardly. He's like most men, I guess; too busy for religion. Of course, he wanted me to have Sonny christened, but that was chiefly to please his parents."

"Mmh! his parents! What about yours?"

"Mine?" She took him up sharply now. "What about mine?"

"Come now, Evelyn," and the doctor laughed a little. "Such old friends as we are can be perfectly honest with each other. Even if you weren't brought up as a Jewess, you must know your parents used to belong to a Temple. And your grandfather—he died before you were born, or you'd know that he was one of the most faithful Jews who ever lived."

Evelyn's shoulders under the rose silk kimono shrugged impatiently. "I've hardly heard about grandfather. And you know as well as I do that you're almost the only Jewish friend we have. So what are you driving at? You're not trying to convert me back as my age, are you?"

"Heaven forbid!" answered the doctor, but now he spoke aloud. "What I'm driving at is this; did you ever have any religious training—rather any Jewish religious training—as a child?"

Evelyn considered. "No, not a single bit as far as I remember. Dan and mother called themselves ethical culturists or something. And my chum went to the Episcopalian Sunday school and took me along. I was even confirmed there. But why do you ask?"

"You're sure you were never taught any religious observances at home—any Hebrew prayers?"

"Of course not!"

"You never attended a Jewish religious service of any kind."

"Never. Except a ball they gave at the Jewish Community Center once when I was going with a Jewish girl for a little while, and her brother coaxed me to go. But I wouldn't call that a religious service."

"Then I can't understand it," confessed the doctor, frankly baffled.

"What can't you understand?" Evelyn's tone had grown slightly impatient under his cross-questioning.

"When you were so ill just after the baby came," explained the doctor, "and lay at the point of death, you kept murmuring a Hebrew prayer."

"Nonsense!"

"My dear child, it's not nonsense. As you lay there you kept repeating, 'Shema, Yisroel, Adonoi elohenu, Adonoi echod.' It's the prayer every good Jew recites with his dying breath. But how could you have learned it? What made you say it in your great danger? I'm not a mystic, but you looked so like your old grandfather when he was dying, that I could have sworn his spirit was with us in that room, telling you what to say in your extremity."

Evelyn laughed, laughed long and heartily. "O doctor, you scientists are so funny," she gasped. "You pretend you don't believe anything, and then when something you can't understand happens you dig up the most foolish explanations. I suppose you thought that just because I had a pious Jewish grandfather, I couldn't really get away from Judaism no matter how I tried."

The doctor nodded gravely. "Exactly. When I was a boy in cheder I learned that the unborn Jewish soul takes upon itself the burden of Judaism. You may laugh, my dear young woman, but I defy you to explain why such a good Episcopalian as you try to be, stepped back into the Jewish fold when you were so near your death hour, and repeated a prayer you say you never heard before."

"Yes, I certainly can clear up your mystery," Evelyn answered him coolly. "I've known how to say that 'Shema, Yisroel' which excited you so for at least five years."

"But how—what? Didn't you tell me you were never taught anything Jewish?"

"Oh, I thought you meant things you learn in a Jewish Sunday school; things a rabbi teaches you. When I was in high school I had a Jewish friend. The one whose brother took me to that dance at the Community Center. But mamma didn't like me to run with her; they lived down town and weren't, well well, nice people. You know what I mean. Anyhow, one day we were going to take a French exam. She was pretty poor in French and kept muttering 'Shema, shema' till I thought she must be going crazy. And when I asked her she explained it was part of something she always said when she was sick or scared or in trouble. She told me the whole of it. And the next time we had a quiz in geometry and I wasn't prepared, I said it too—and I passed. Of course I thought it was all nonsense, but everybody's got to have his superstitions, and as long as it worked once, I just kept on with it.

"Don't you dare and laugh at me but I kept saying it all through the dance the night Bob proposed to me. I just wanted to make sure. And there was a terrible storm when we were crossing on our honeymoon, and it made me feel safer to keep saying it—just like a charm. So—"

"So, when you thought you were dying, you repeated your charm again," the doctor ended for her. He rose to go. "You win, my child! Your confirmation has gone deeper than all the prayers and tears and facts of your sainted grandfather. The 'Shema' he recited all his life and found comfort in on his death bed has become only a charm to you. It's a good thing you've had Bob, Jr., baptized. A child ought to know where he stands nowadays."

The doctor reached out his cup for more tea. His lips smiled satirically but there was a pained look in his eyes.

EDITOR, CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW:

I wish to submit the following report. It concerns my activities with the Jewish boys at the Victoria Industrial School during the past year.

During the first few visits there, just twelve months ago, I found that previous to them work with the boys had been entirely devoid of a programme of any sort. A free hand was given me as to carrying on. I experimented for several weeks, finding out what the boys themselves wanted rather than teaching what I thought they might want.

I might say here that within three months after my first visit the improved behaviour of the Jewish [illegible] brought to my attention both Mr. Ferrier and Mr. Pettinger, the superintendent and deputy-superintendent respectively. The boys themselves remarked that they were receiving better treatment at the hands of the [illegible]. This new condition has continued. The following fact illustrates [illegible] whereas formerly the Jewish [illegible] were the chief "hikers" from the [illegible] during the past year only one [illegible] ran away, which, I believe, [illegible] a record.

I soon found that for efficient work it was necessary, where possible, to keep in touch with parents of these boys. This I have found by making personal calls and [illegible] ways, while at periods has [illegible] at my time.

My Sunday [illegible] forenoon [illegible] out somewhat as follows: First and third Sunday, Jewish Biblical history, giving them the science rather than the details; then writing letters home; and if time allowed, a short walk out of grounds.

Every second and fourth Sunday, talks on the basis of good behaviour (not sermons); mental hygiene and health or discussions and debates on problems affecting the boys. Thus sides were taken on "Resolved, that it is the duty of one boy to try and catch another who has run away from the School" or "Resolved, that it is the children's fault and not that of the parents that boys go wrong." The arguments brought forth by some of these boys were at times a revelation of ability otherwise suppressed.

Contrary to general belief, I found that frank and open discussion on any problem whatsoever that affected the boys had a most beneficial effect on them. I gently drew from the boys' thoughts which they had brooded over for longer or shorter periods. Brooding over real or imaginary grievances on the part of a boy is a dangerous thing, similar to an explosive which can be set off with a tiny spark. Thus I shall instance the case of one seventeen-year old lad who was secretly planning revenge for a beating at which he claims he was given more than one hundred lashes over the seat and thighs. His plan (which I chanced to learn) was to "hike" some day in a certain officer's car, and after reaching a safe distance to smash the car by ditching it. A short talk with him caused him to alter his plans. His behaviour after that improved; I interceded for him, and two months later he was paroled.

My aim with the boys always is to make them ready for the time when each in his turn is paroled.

During the past year, twenty Jewish boys have been at various periods in my Sunday class at the school. Nine of these were paroled, one being re-committed and another is still there because it has not yet been possible to find a home for him in Toronto. One boy, Murray Greenbaum, was killed in a railroad-crossing accident. There are thus twelve Jewish boys at the institution at present.

Of the twenty boys, ten were from Toronto, six from Hamilton, two from Windsor, one from Ottawa and one from Ford City. These twenty Jewish boys cost the Toronto Big Brotherhood about $150 during the past year. If reckoned according to the number of boys and the time they spent there, only $71.00 or less than half should have been shared by the Toronto Jewish community, while $53.00 should have been shared by Hamilton, $9.00 by Windsor and $4.50 by each of Ottawa and Ford City.

Thanks are due Rabbi Isserman, Miss Clara Kallmeyer and the Sisterhood of Holy Blossom Temple for their splendid efforts on behalf of these boys on the different Jewish holidays, both at the school and when the boys were brought into the city. I. Markus provided the necessary funds for taking the boys to the local theatre one evening. A. Bloom took charge of the group during several Sundays that I was personally unable to attend.

In conclusion I respectfully submit for your consideration the following recommendations:

1. That a copy of this report be sent to the Jewish Boys' Work Committees in Hamilton, Windsor and Ottawa, especially to Hamilton.

2. That a physician be sent out at least once every three months to give the Jewish boys there a thorough physical examination. I cannot urge this too strongly. Two boys had suffered until paroled, from continual eye strain while others received little attention for chronic rashes and so on.

3. That a letter of thanks be sent to each of those who have been of assistance to me in this work in one way or another during the past year.

4. That a copy of this report be given to the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW so that the Jewish public at large may become acquainted with the work being carried on in this phase of Jewish communal life.

Yours sincerely,
J. GOLLOM.

Editor,
CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW,

One of the most thought-provoking articles that has appeared of late in the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW is that written by M. Frank, captioned "The Separate School in Montreal and Elsewhere." How thought-provoking it is can best be appreciated when we are told that while "we cannot conceive of a country-wide system of separate schools within the time of our generation" still "we ought to institute gradually such a combined system."

One of the most delectable morsels that can be dished up for the Jewish palate is that of Separate Schools for the Jews—and what a tempting, tantalizing picture such a system is made to portray—for will it not give status and dignity to One who has been the World's Greatest Wanderer? Will it not be the magic "sesame" whereby the Jew will enter that regal realm wherein once arrived he will find himself "clothed with" Rights and Powers which seem to be the special attributes of his more fortunate Christian neighbours? And above all will it not enable the Jew to perpetuate that Judaism, which though it is the "raison d'etre" of the Jew's existence is nevertheless shedding itself from the Jew as a caterpillar sheds its new found coat?

Now let us be honest with ourselves. If a cake is a marvel in itself it needs no icing to make it tasty. If a Separate School System is inherently a Godsend it needs no literary embellishments wherewith it may endear itself in the hearts of an audience. Against affronted enthusiasts of a system that from the standpoint of a Jew is inherently defective, we must be particularly cautious. Separate Schools means parochial schools and parochial schools means "class schools"—that is, just as you have classes amongst labour and capital, you will have educational entities on classes amongst Catholics, Protestants and Jews, and in an age when the world is groping for at least one system where "classes" have no place, parochial schools are proving but another factor which a country must erase in its attempt to eradicate rather than perpetuate the foulness and demoralizing aspect of "class." No community wants to have its structure based on "classes"—class breeds distinction and too often emphasizes differences beyond their normal proportions; it goes further—class prevents understanding, for where class is against class there is no medium to bridge the gap—there is no bridge—no common meeting ground—and when class A is ignorant of class B it imagines and clothes B with attributes, which too often are far from right. Misunderstanding among a family group is bad enough—misunderstanding in a community is pitiful. How pitiful it is to be misunderstood only the Jew alone knows—for he is to-day the living example of misunderstanding.

What is education? Is it not a study of mankind, of human nature, of character rather than a study of religion? Religion is but an aspect of education and not the whole of education. Religion is but an instruction while human nature is an education in itself. To know religion—Judaism, is to be "instructed." To know human nature is to be educated. No parochial systems of education can give you more than mere instructions—never a true slant upon life and living. A sweeping statement! True enough, but the more sweeping it is the more true it is.

Dr. Ryerson, who was Supervisor of Education in Ontario for more than twenty-five years, at a time when Ontario was still Upper Canada, writes in his Memoirs, p. 334, this: "I think that those who establish separate schools voluntarily place themselves and their children at a disadvantage in regard to sound education and in relation to the community at large. Every man is inflicting an irreparable injury upon his children when he seeks to isolate them from that acquaintance, that intercourse, that community of feeling with their youthful citizens which in the very nature of things is necessary to secure general confidence and favour."

Now what is this disadvantage—this irreparable injury which Dr. Ryerson had in mind? Or putting it another way, what is the disadvantage, the intrinsic benevolence that a public school system confers on a people and which no other school system can provide? The public school is a veritable Republic of childhood. Here the child's first reactions and expressions accordingly take place. Here come Jews and non-Jews. It is here that human nature has its genesis. In this primary playground, in this childhood neighbourhood, human nature comes into existence. The public school presupposes a school in which the activities of children have been made genuinely social. Here the growing child nature gets a complete many-sided self realization within a social order that as yet knows not the meaning of creed or race, and so, within this common institution wherein all shades of opinion are found these youthful citizens are constructing their own little universe for themselves, and with it those things that make up a true universe, sentiment, fair play, toleration and esprit de corps. As years go by the Jewish child interprets his Canadian friends to his Jewish parents, their Canadian classmates in turn interpret for his parents, his non-Jewish friends. And growing up with such sentiments engrafted in their hearts, mutual respect between Jew and non-Jew becomes a reality in later life. Therein lies the uniqueness of a public school system. For whatever else it has contributed to Jewish emancipation one thing is certain it is eradicating the roots of that terrifying phenomena of anti-semitism by dispelling knowledge about the Jew. Everyone outside our own race is potentially an ant-isemite and it requires but an accident to turn the potentiality into a reality. Separate schools may be that accident. We must be warned against rehabilitating a decadent anti-semitism in Canada. For amongst the wrongs against which a Jewish child needs protection, is the wrong done by those who brought him into this world and failed to secure for him a life worth living. A separate school is a system barren of the seeds of friendship and generosity so essential to man's later life. It is therefore without the power to bridge that unfortunate abyss between Jew and non-Jew.

Judaism can be perpetuated as it always has been—by the Talmud Torahs, and what would be conducive to such a perpetuation is not the need of a Separate School for Jews, but a procredure which would enforce a Compulsory Attendance at such Talmud Torhas for children, without castigating against a Public School System. There need be no fear that your child who left home early in the morning for public school would come back with something in his heart as black as Hell. Judaism and the Talmud Torahs are one thing, public school and education another. The two should not be confused if our task to-day is to free youth from prejudices and hatreds.

Whether or not the community chest plan launched recently by the Bnai Brith of Toronto gains a foothold and becomes established, the Jewish community should have a representative body to discuss appeals for money. Community support should be withheld from a cause unless this body says when and how much. At present an organization, big or little, decides for itself when its next campaign will be and it can count on some support, grudging, good-natured, half-indulgent, lackadaisical or enthusiastic, without investigation on the part of the contributors. What this town needs is a communal committee to decide on quotas and to get away from war-time lingo and fever in connection with them. The community chest strives to do away with many programmes, campaigns and appeals by giving to the causes from community funds on the say-so of its committee. But without a community chest into which all funds are paid, a communal committee could do a great deal to direct the community's donations reasonably and in sensible proportion.

To begin with, a new attitude should be fostered toward the collection of money. This is peace time, so to speak, and for a long time few emergencies of so critical a nature have presented themselves that a campaign for charity or a cause has to be conducted at high pitch with worn-out, war-time slogans and standardized, screeching speeches and adjectives. Men who conduct their own businesses calmly and even phlegmatically will lose all sense of restraint, dignity and balance in face of the well-known, tiresome, whirlwind drive. That the high-tension campaign as a bad means to a good end is unjustified is shown by the fact that the tenser the campaign the bigger the harvest of delinquents later. Would it not be more sensible to save energy by getting fewer pledges, but pledges that are sound and pan out?

Too often those who head individual drives decide upon too large a quota to be reached in comfort. Then starts up the old stuff about going over the top, showing pep, and giving until it hurts, etc., etc. A quota should be considered in the light of business conditions, and with regard to the cause, its needs and also other causes and their needs and claims on the public. It is better to attain a quota that is within reason than to break a blood vessel trying after one that isn't. And why in the name of all that's holy should any one give until it hurts? Is that going to make him help the cause more willingly next time? It would take tens of thousands, often hundreds of thousands of dollars before a wealthy man is hurt. Will he give until then? No. Then why expect it of the middle class or the poor? When a man knows that he can afford a hundred dollars, if that much, it is bad policy to surround him three to one and nag him into another fifty. If he does pledge another fifty he will become sour in the calmer future and if he is unable to pay his pledge he will be henceforth a bad friend to a good cause.

A community committee to decide on appeals presumably would be made up of people of all classes and, it might be said, all amounts. The result might be for the greater financial comfort of all who give. The rich would not be expected to do it all nor the others to give what they can't. There would certainly be more sense about the amount of money which is given outside the community while people still suffer within it. Some causes which sound worthy but prove to be unnecessary and superfluous upon investigation could be denied general communal support. Others, like the Old Folks' Home, for instance, would not have to beg for interest. Much back-biting and rivalry in which the cause itself is lost in the poison ivy would be done away with and bazaars for next November would not have to be announced in April to keep some other organization from grabbing the date.

A round table would help to fasten more closely together the various elements in the community and broaden their respective sympathies. It would make life easier for the man who has calls made on him constantly for every cause under the sun, known to him and unknown. It would do the community a great favour by deciding, in a business-like way, what the traffic will bear for all appeals. Whether or not the community chest plan takes, a round-table could be serviceable in an honest attempt at honest communal co-operation.

"Times change— now it's us"

Old days — old ways. Nowadays, better methods of living call for an entire elimination of wash-day drudgery in the home. Because housewives differ in their ideas as to the amount of help required in their family-wash problems, we have evolved five different services, priced according to the stage of completion towards which the wash is taken. Also we have two different kinds of super-speed, 24-hour service. We believe you would be more than pleased with the wash-day help we provide and would be glad to explain our new services over the telephone. Phone any time.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

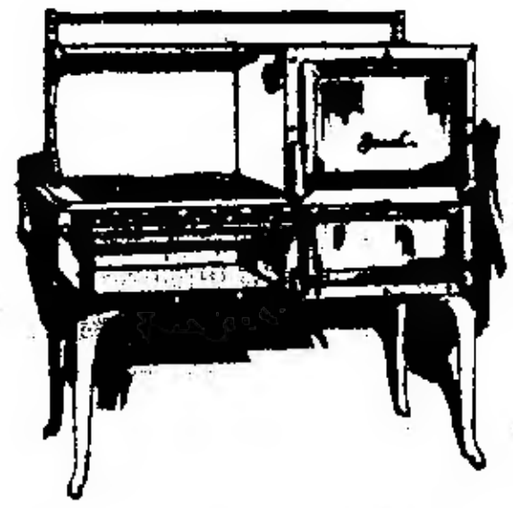
Gas Ranges of Unrivalled Excellence



A Beach gas range equipped with a Robertshaw "Automaticook" is unquestionably the last word in gas range construction. Any degree of oven temperature is automatically maintained by simply setting a dial at the temperature desired. Uniformly perfect results are assured with considerable saving of TIME, WORRY and EXPENSE.

Beach gas ranges possess an unusually high standard of quality and have taken the lead not by accident, but because of actual merit.

There's a Beach range to suit your requirements. One demonstration will convince you.

It Pays to keep your refrigerator well filled with ICE

YOUR milkman and your grocer guard your food for you, up to the time it is delivered, by keeping it ON ICE CONSTANTLY.

How wasteful, then, to let food deteriorate and lose flavor by not keeping it in a well iced refrigerator in your home—right up to the minute you are ready to cook or serve it.

It costs less to keep your refrigerator well filled with ice all the time than to let the ice run low. The refrigerator keeps colder and the ice melts more slowly.

Food is Expensive—Save it with ICE happy to give the young people every facility to proceed with their endeavours.

It is our opinion that the leaders of Young Judaea have in the past been too timid in presenting their demands before the parent Zionist Organization. Zionism implies Young Judaea even as age implies youth. The Zionist organization will be bankrupt before long unless it is reinforced by recruits from the ranks of Young Judaea. If it values itself it must value the source of its future strength. Young Judaea is therefore justified in demanding—not begging for—proper support for its activity. It is needed by the Zionist Organization more badly than it needs the Zionist Organization. It should therefore have the courage to present its case openly and frankly to the Zionist administration: "If you want Young Judaea you must pay for it." And we should like to see Young Judaea properly financed so that it might develop its powers and supply the need in Canadian Zionism of the cultural phase of its activity. A.B.B.

Rabbi Solomon Goldman, conservative rabbi and head of the Jewish Centre, of Cleveland, Ohio, will be present at the Young Judaea Convention as principal speaker at the closing banquet at the Primrose Club, Monday evening, June 27. Subject of his address, "The Cultural Implications of Young Judaea."

Nathan Reich, supervisor of Young Judaea, of Montreal, who will be present at the Young Judaea Convention here, will read a paper on "Methods in Young Judaea" at the Round Table Conference which is being held on Saturday afternoon, June 25, at the home of Mrs. L. Gelber.
